Monthly Asset Class Convictions and Risk Positioning

Green Shoots With Deep Roots

The trajectory of fundamentals continues to surprise on the upside. Unlike others, we have been calling for global growth to reaccelerate after wobbling into the spring as a result of China's economic problems, the Fed's uncertain direction, and President Trump's trade policies. Those restraints are indeed reversing, so we maintain our constructive Risk Dial Score (RDS) of 2.3.

Against a backdrop of improving global fundamentals and accommodative financial conditions, President Trump has reintroduced uncertainty by threatening a re-escalation of trade frictions, reportedly in response to China's extensive redactions to the initial markup of a trade deal. While productivity-driven disinflation is prolonging the cycle, sustaining it will require an investment uptick, which awaits a calmer environment on the trade front. We continue to believe that a path will be found toward de-escalation.

Consensus is still focused on a slowdown to a "2% trend" in the US, predicated on the idea that 2018 saw a fiscally driven "sugar high" that elevated growth almost 1% above trend. Since only the spent portion of a tax cut actually elevates GDP, the three-quarters of the stimulus that was not spent went to improve corporate balance sheets or bolster individual savings. In our view, since there was no sugar high, there will be no letdown. Others presuming a slowdown to the 2% trend define the trend as 1% labor force growth plus 1% productivity growth. Yet the behavior of each of those components defies the naysayers. Productivity has been rising for three years with the latest read at 2.4%, while payroll growth has been 1.7% for a decade and in the last 12 months continued that pace at 1.8%.

Two data points stand out this month: the impressive 2.4% gain in productivity and a spike in new household formations. Both had been depressed well below prior norms during the post-crisis period. Like private sector deleveraging and fiscal austerity, which had acted as economic wet blankets before reversing, the turnaround in these latest economic indicators points the way to an economy whose outlook is less slow and more durable.

Over our Capital Market Line horizon, another factor that might continue to frustrate proponents of secular stagnation is demographics. In a new study, Morgan Stanley points out that after two decades of decelerating labor force growth due to retiring baby boomers, members of Gen Y and Gen Z are now flooding into the workforce. Even allowing for their more muted consumption patterns, trend consumption is set to accelerate. Personal consumption growth peaked in the late 1990s at 4%, fell to 1.7% at present, and, according to this demographic study, will now rise to 2.5% in five years. The US stands alone in this respect, with most other nations still facing shrinking workforces.

Finally, China's slowdown is already showing green shoots, with growth set to cyclically inflect higher for the remainder of 2019. Growth in 2020 and beyond depends on China's success in rejuvenating its private sector, which is less leveraged and more productive than its state-owned enterprises. Thus, it could surprise in its sustainability.

About This Report

Each month, we meet to evaluate our overall risk positioning and asset class convictions over a nine- to 18-month horizon. In this report, we take a broad look at the markets and our risk posture. Then, we drill down to discuss the latest developments affecting our positioning within asset classes and provide a snapshot of our convictions across regions and markets.

Our Risk Dial Score (RDS)

The RDS is based on the Capital Market Line's slope and asset-class dispersion in conjunction with the direction of fundamentals over nine to 18 months.

Market Developments

Here, we summarize the trends and developments that could have an impact on our positioning.

Equities

Brazilian chances for pension reform are evolving in a positive manner. While its recovery is weak by historical standards, Brazil remains one of the very few countries in an early growth stage, which would be fortified with this reform. We think it is an attractive candidate for adding exposure, as are US cyclical stocks, which have participated in the year-to-date rally but whose valuations continue to reflect disbelief regarding growth prospects into 2020.

Fixed Income

The recent rally in US Treasuries takes them deeper into unattractive territory. We maintain our stance for very short duration, expecting yields to rise on further signs of growth recovery in the global manufacturing sector and a de-escalation of trade issues.

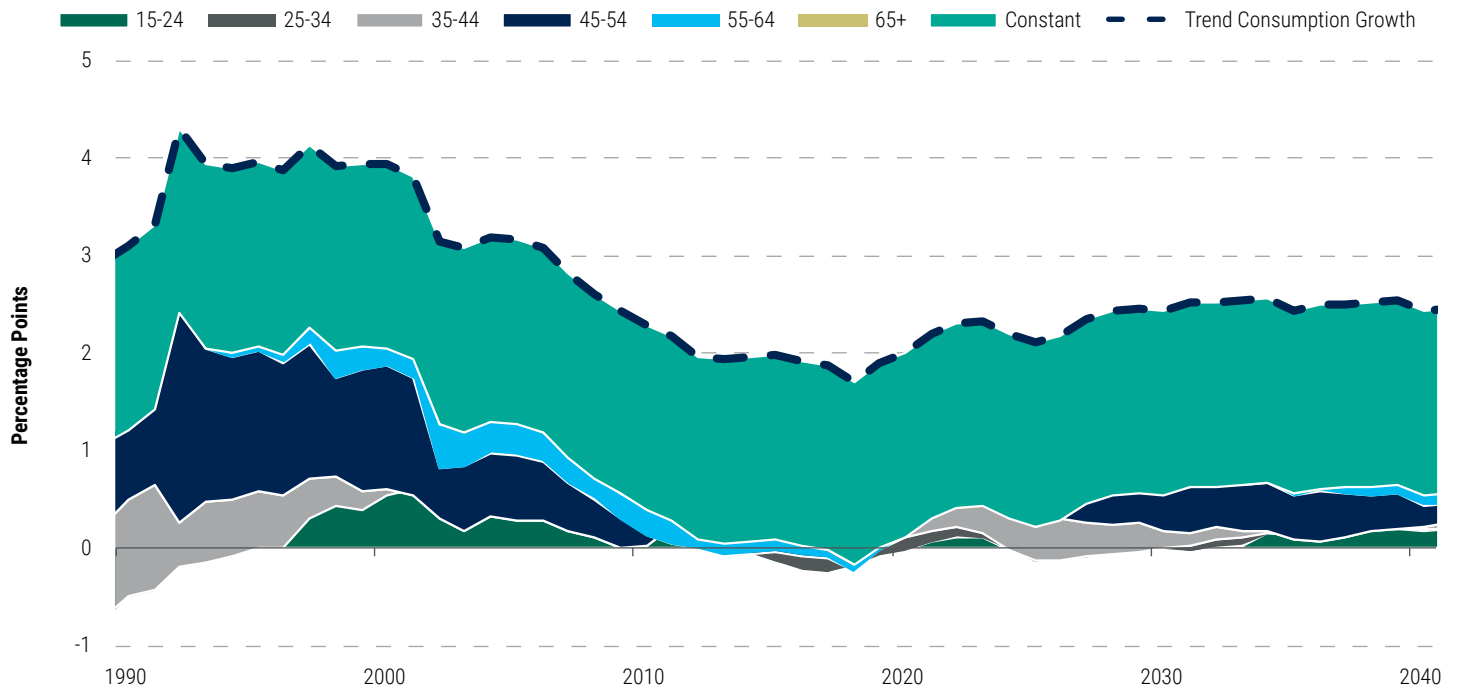

Within credit, we find it puzzling that despite the rally in high yield spreads, investment-grade credit curves have remained fairly steep. This may provide an opportunity.

Alternatives

The US midstream energy sector has been through a dramatic transformation over the last few years, as markets have disciplined it into reducing leverage and controlling capital expenditures. Yet the sector continues to trade at an attractive yield, despite an expected jump in EBITDA over the next few quarters as new pipelines finally come on-stream. This could set up this sector for a re-rating alongside the healthy return from carry.

US Demographic Contributions to Consumption Growth

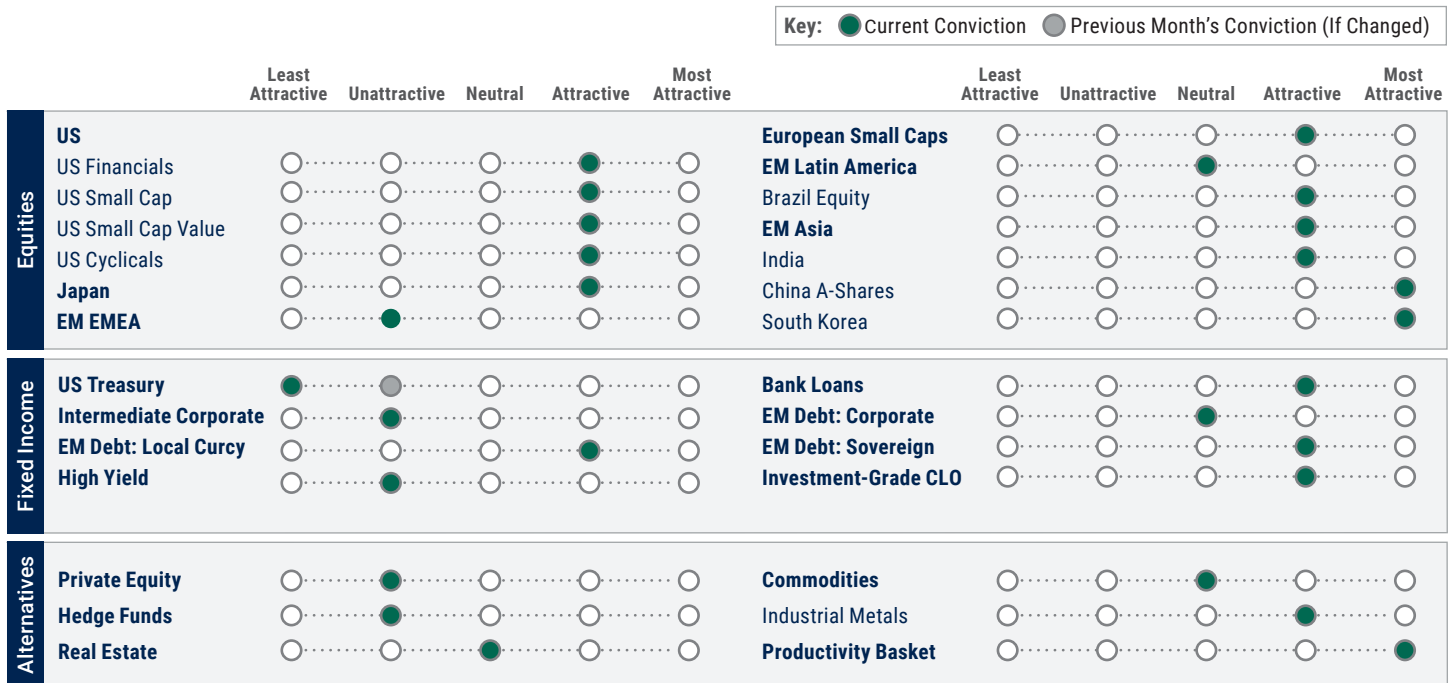

We expect demographics to be a tailwind to US growth as millennials reach their peak consumption age.

Capital Market Line Endnotes

The Capital Market Line (CML) is based on PineBridge Investments' estimates of forward-looking five-year returns and standard deviation. It is not intended to represent the return prospects of any PineBridge products, only the attractiveness of asset class indexes, compared across the capital markets. The CML quantifies several key fundamental judgments made by the Global Multi-Asset Team for each asset class, which, when combined with current pricing, results in our annualized return forecasts for each class over the next five years. The expected return for each asset class, together with our view of the risk for each asset class as defined by volatility, forms our CML. Risk Warning: All investments involve risk, including possible loss of principal. Past performance is not indicative of future results. If applicable, the offering document should be read for further details including the risk factors. Our investment management services relate to a variety of investments, each of which can fluctuate in value. The investment risks vary between different types of instruments. For example, for investments involving exposure to a currency other than that in which the portfolio is denominated, changes in the rate of exchange may cause the value of investments, and consequently the value of the portfolio, to go up or down. In the case of a higher volatility portfolio, the loss on realization or cancellation may be very high (including total loss of investment), as the value of such an investment may fall suddenly and substantially. In making an investment decision, prospective investors must rely on their own examination of the merits and risks involved.
